Consumer-driven sustainability was one of the many topics discussed during this month's Forest Stewardship Council® (FSC®) General Assembly, where members came together to determine the future of the organization. Everyday purchases are crucial to mainstreaming sustainable practices, which is why companies like Domtar and Kimberly-Clark are working to give shoppers more options than ever.

Meet Randell Ewing, Jr., a South Carolina landowner who understands the environmental, social, and economic value of responsibly managing the land that his father originally purchased back in the 1970's to hunt on. The work may be labor intensive (1.5 million trees planted!), but the positive, long-term impact keeps him committed.

Paper bags were first measured by how many pounds of sugar they held.

EVERYDAY SUSTAINABILITY

Before heading out for treats, consider this costume trick: Raid thrift stores, yard sales, and even your own closet to create a one-of-a-kind look. If you do choose to purchase new, donate the costume for use by future trick-or-treaters.
